General Newton nodded to General Abbott as he landed, indicating that all was ready. Then be turned toward his wife and daughter. A path was made for them in the gathering. The child stepped quickly forward and stood at the edge of one of Lieutenant Lusk's cameras, her cheeks glowing, and the breeze waving her loose brown hair. The others moved back, exposing her to the scrutiny of thousands of eyes turned on the pier. There was only a moment's delay in making ready for the touch that was to tell how well the work of years had been done. Presently General Abbott stepped to the side of the child, holding the key-board that was to control the circuit in his [New York Times.] that was to control the circuit in his hands. Before it was attached to the wires he allowed the little girl to examine it, and showed her the key which, under the pressure of her finger, was to discharge the mine.

"You must just touch it like this," he said, giving it a tap with his finger. The child looked at him with sparkling eyes, but without evincing the alightest nervousness.

"I know," she said, "like this."
And she touched the key with a tiny gloved finger. "One side, gentlemen; keep five feet from the wire," commanded the sentinels, under instruction from the Lieutenant.

No one seemed anxious to remain in proximity to the wire after the ex-tremely ticklish process of attaching the ends to the key-board was begun, and a slight sensation of nervousness began to permeate the little group of ladies and gentlemen. There were several anxious faces in the throng, and one young man suddenly stole away and, after getting out of sight behind an adjacent ice-house, he ran with all his speed in the direction of Hunter's Point. Others shifted their positions uneasily and speculated mentally upon the probable consequences if General Newton, who was calmly observing the operation of connecting the wires, had by any possibility under-estimated the force of the explosives. Flood Rock, with the tremendous forces so soon to be turned loose, confined underneath. was only 1,000 feet away, and 1,000 feet under the circumstances seemed a very short distance, and it began to seem still shorter as the seconds wore on and the four wires were one after

General Abbott held the key-board in both hands and kept the key away from contact with his body or his clothes, while the child at his side watched every motion with the utmost eagerness, her eyes dancing with impatience. Finally the last wire was connected and everything was ready. The ladies and gentlemen moved back, leaving only General Newton, General Abbott, and the little girl in the open space before spoke, that Mr. Sartoris's neglect of the pier-house, General Abbott, still his bride on the Baltic, on which vesholding the key-board between both sel they left New York, the third week hands, raising the lines of wire which in May, 1874—the 23d of that month, trailed down under the water and led to 1 think—excited the greatest indigna-

NELLIE GRANT'S WOE.

A Washington special to the Phila-delphia Times says: The much-copied publication from the Denver Opinion in reference to the matrimonial infelicities of Mrs. Nellie Grant-Sartoris, and its of Mrs. Nellie Grant-Sartoris, and its assertion that she will soon institute proceedings for a divorce from her husband, Mr. Algernon Charles Frederick Sartoris, has naturally been much discussed in Washington, where she grew up from childhood, and where her marriage occurred. Those who were in Washington during the months preceding her wedding in the White House. May 21, 1874, are not surprised to hear that Mr. Sartoris proved a neglectful husband, for it was common talk in private here before and at the time of her marriage that it was a shame that he showed his chosen wife so little attention. They were frequently at the name parties during the winter and spring of 1874, and comment was canstantly made as to his being so negligent of her and indifferent in his mangent of her and indifferent in his manner. At the same time it was known that he was paying marked attention to a young married lady in Washington, whose husband was then absent. and that he sent that lady a bouquet and a note on the morning he was mar-ried. It was thought here that he was actuated by a desire to marry the President's daughter, and that he had little appreciation for the simple, maidenly virtues of Nellie Grant, who was never a "showy" girl in manner or appearance, but a simple, modest, affectionate, artless American girl, who

Washington in 1874 that when Mr. Sartoris was in the West, after he became engaged to Miss Grant, he had boasted of his engagement to the President's daughter, and when his assertion was doubted, because he was not sufficiently well thought of in that locality for it to be supposed possible that the daughter of the President of the United States would marry him, that he had actually shown her letters to prove that she had promised to do so. In the spring of 1874 I saw copied in the Washington (D. C.) Capital a very sarcastic paragraph from the Washington in 1874 that when Mr. a very sarcastic paragraph from the Waukesha (Wis.) Plain Dealer, de-scribing the uncouth appearance of Mr. Sartoris when in that town, and mentioning how the girls had laughed at him, and adding that he had courted one of them, "who preferred that he should marry Nellie Grant or some other girl," and would have none of him. I wrote to the editor of that paper, A. F. Pratt, to ask him if the paragraph was true, or if it were only paragraph was true, or if it were only written as a joke. I have his reply, dated April 20, 1874, and another letter from him on the same subject, dated May 12, 1874, now before me. In these letters he told me that the young lady to whom he referred was his next-door neighbor, gave me her name for my private information, and said that she was an old sweetheart of Mr. Sartoris and had a large photograph of him, which he had given her. I have also before me a letter, written March 11, 1874, by a young Englishman of high standing, who was then in Washington, which, in giving me a sketch of Mr. Sartoris's family. mentioned that "Algernon and his father came over to this country last year in the steamer Russia for the purpose of looking after some lands the father owned in Wisconsin, and the son was subsequently left there to look after the lands. It was on the steamer Rus-sia that he met Miss Grant."

COURTING OTHER GIRLS. So that it appears from these two letters, as well as from other sources of information I had at the time, that it was after he met Miss Grant, and the courtship began on the steamer, as named, where they saw more of each other than at any subsequent time un-til their marriage, that Mr. Sartoris courted the young lady in Wisconsin, so was in point of fact courting two girls, one of them the daughter of the President of the United States, at the It was well known here that President Grant was greatly depressed at the time of his daughter's marriage, and quite broke down when he bade her good-by on her wedding-day. I know that Mrs. Grant said within a week before the marriage that she greatly regretted that Nellie had chosen a for-eigner for a husband, and added that she had always hoped that Nellie would marry some nice young army or navy officer. I have heard more than once, first not long after the wedding trip to England, and again within the last few months, from those who said they knew whereof they tion among the American travellers, Almost involuntarily the spectators and that this indignation came near bebott nodded to the child, who stepped found that he had made no arrangehaving had rooms engaged in the There was a single instant of breathless silence. Most of the cattle had long horns and an ugly gleam in their eyes, but one had short horns, and, although he looked as if he might have held his own in a square fight on the plains, he seemed to have lost heart in civilization. At the corner of Penu Square and Market street he stopped, and wearily leaned his shoulder against a lamp-post. A small boy jabbed a prod into him, and with a long-drawn sigh he moved on; but just before reaching Twelfth street he cluded the vigilance of the small boy and ambled into Steen's tea-store, at 1209 Market street. He licked up a mouthful of Oelong, and then prepared to settle down on a pile of coffee-sacks for a nap. He was interrupted, however, and told

With another weary sigh, he walked out and diagonally across the street to Fernberger Brothers' liquor-store, at 1236 Market street. He entered the store and poked his nose through the cashier's window, and when the cashier stuck a pen up his nostril he became confused and tried to climb to the top of a pile of whiskey-barrels, and when they tumbled down about him helooked disgusted, and, switching down a dozen bottles of wine with his tail, he walked out. He then sought refuge in other stores, but was repulsed and driven forth. When he reached Jacob Crouse & Sons' carpet-store, at 1218 Market street, he made a bolt for the Market street, he made a bolt for the interior through the plate-glass doors. He got his horns through at the expense of a big pane of glass, and then he looked more disgusted than ever and moved on again. Then he tried to find a resting-place in Philip C. Shaffer's store, at 1216 Market street, but was again repulsed. Then he seemed to lose heart, and, walking down Market street to Twelith street, he turned down that theroughfore and wandered along affectionate, artiess American girl, who affectionate, artiess American girl, who was sure to prove a faithful wife to a tender husband, as she has proved a good wife and mother in spite of the alight encouragement it would seem her husband has given her to develop her husband has given her to develop her heat traits.

ARTHY CONDUCT.

ATTACKED BY A PANTHER.

Terrible Experience of a Man on the Mesunistius-Newriv Clawed to Death.

'A Bedford (Pa.) special says: Seven miles south of this place, surrounding the village of Cheneysville, are wild and extensive forests, which stretch away in all directions for many miles. The road from there northward to this town leads through this wilderness, which for some time past has been a dreaded haunt of panthers and other wild animals. The other evening Philip Swartzwelder was returning home on horseback by this road from Cheneysville, and just as he passed a particularly rocky part of the woods a large panther sprang into the road and attacked him. The ferocious beast leaped upon the horse and clawed Swartzwelder terribly, tearing his coat and pantaloons from the ing his coat and pantaloons from the ing his coat and pantaloons from the said can be passed as particularly rocky part of the woods a large panther sprang into the road and attacked him. The horse became greatly frightened, and in its frantic plunging the panther lost his grip and fell off. The horse and rider then made good their escape. The next day shreds of Swartz-welder's clothes were found on the spot, and in the evening his father undertook to ride past the place, but the horse became nervous and agitated and refused to move forward. This is the second experience of this kind that Swartzwelder has had within a short time. A few days ago William Bar-thelow was followed by a panther for several rods. Panthers have lately been heard crying in the woods by a large number of persons in the neighborhood of Chenevsville. A rich discovery of silver chlorides has been made on the surface of the Broken-Hill claim at Silverton, New South Wales, which is said to run through a lode more than twenty feet The chlorides have been found over a distance of nearly half a mile.
